

“...after a few more moments and a few delicate arcs of flight, a melody travels down through Travis’s sinewy conduit to play itself out in the middle of the park, trickling out his fingers, traveling out over the grass and out through the humidity. He listens to the way the strings of the guitar are affected by the evaporated water in the air. He listens to his mood and memories. For a moment, as the song plays out and swirls in the hollow wooden body of the guitar, the music defines Travis. For a moment, he is found in the calm melody and vague memories of horses.”
